

Industry Kitchen – Waterfront Restaurant and Bar

Industry Kitchen – 70 South Street, Manhattan, New York City

South Street Seaport's newest waterfront restaurant and bar had its grand opening last week and you're all in for a treat. Industry Kitchen is a new spot for a summer happy hour with unobstructed views of the water and Brooklyn skyline.

Aside from the food (we'll get there), what makes this place interesting is the architecture. Industry Kitchen combines industrial sharp edges and concrete with reclaimed plank wood. The result is a mixture of industry and sea – combining both features of the area.

Executive Chef Marco Arnold focuses the menu on freshly made pizzas, grilled meats and vegetables from two large custom-made wood burning ovens. The appetizers I had were pretty good. They weren't anything that blew me away, but for bar snacks they hit the spot. I can't speak to some of the larger dishes – steak, salmon, pizza, etc. but judging from other reviews, these can be very hit or miss.

Aside from the food, there are some delicious, refreshing cocktails from bartenders with a strong pour. Try the Older & Wiser. You won't regret it.
